This unbuilt design project strived to resolve complex, triangular, site geometry issues by challenging the conventional design wisdom of rectangular, office-block models. The architectural imagery of this unbuilt work is firmly rooted in the Modern Movement, expressing drama and provocative sculpting of forms. The tilted, exterior-envelope skin features translucent, corner-stair panels; metallic-finish, copper spandrels; and a whimsical, canopied entrance. This flamboyant expression of the sculpted form represents a new level of inquiry into the sensual aspects of architecture for Trifos Design Consultants. Unfortunately, this project's exploration of scale and plane, sculpture and facade, still remains unresolved and unbuilt.
